Table MCTE9: As you may know, social media companies typically apply public interest policies to current elected officials, such as the sitting U.S. president or other heads of state. These policies include flagging any posts that may include inaccurate information, rather than completely deleting the posts as is done to regular users. These policies often do not apply to officials who no longer hold public office. Based on what you know now, do you believe social media public interest policies should also be in effect for officials after they leave office?

Table MCTE9: As you may know, social media companies typically apply public interest policies to current elected officials, such as the sitting U.S. president or other heads of state. These policies include flagging any posts that may include inaccurate information, rather than completely deleting the posts as is done to regular users. These policies often do not apply to officials who no longer hold public office. Based on what you know now, do you believe social media public interest policies should also be in effect for officials after they leave office?
